

When you were sleeping

Photoink, a professional platform for contemporary photography in India has collaborated with Chatterjee & Lal to present works of Jaipur-based photographer Dhruv Malhotra. On view are works from his exhibitions Sleepers and Noida Soliloquy. Malhotra, who is a self-claimed insomniac, has consistently photographed the night. His work aims to reveal what the night otherwise conceals. The photographs are made with long exposures, making them appear well-lit. You will find a range of photos exposing unfamiliar faces and objects through the streets and parks of Noida — from a man sleeping on a park bench to an empty wedding ground — all trying to mark absence yet telling a story. The show is on till May 4.
